May to September, officers personally handed out 70 tickets, while 8,888 tickets were issued through photo enforcement.

During that time in 2014, a total of 19,385 photo radar tickets were issued — and zero in 2013.

"The simple answer is there's certain criteria (construction) zones have to meet to be photo enforceable, and there just weren't any in 2013," said Staff Sgt. Rob Riffel Thursday.

He pointed to a large construction project on Bishop Grandin Boulevard in 2014 and more "sporadic" ones in 2015, to account for the massive fluctuation.

He said zones have to be of a certain length and on a stretch of road where a speed limit has been reduced due to the fact workers are present or how a road is configured.

"It has to be physically possible to be set up."

City spokesperson Lisa Fraser wrote in an email to Metro that so far, the city has identified one location on southbound Lagimodiere Boulevard near Dugald Road and Marion Street where speed enforcement is anticipated.

"Only construction zones on regional streets where the speed limit is greater than 60 km/h could be considered a speed zone for enforcement," she wrote.

Winnipeg drivers can look forward to a speed trap break this summer, as only one construction project meets city criteria for speed enforcement.

Ticketing in construction zones was raised in a report headed to Friday's police board meeting.

The report says photo enforcement was one of the biggest revenue drivers for 2015; however, despite lots of road renewal, "little enforcement occurred (at construction sites) due to the limited opportunities where enforcement could be conducted."

"Construction ticketing for the summer was almost non-existent as construction sites were not able to have construction enforcement, due to the nature of the site not being conducive to enforcement," it reads.

Disability Matters in debate

MANITOBA ELECTION 2016

Large crowd came out to first event of its kind in decades

Braeden Jones
Metro | Winnipeg

Whereas 15 per cent of Manitobans have a disability, be it resolved that the disabled vote matters, and a large contingent of that population tuned into what was the first disability-focused provincial election debate in decades Thursday.

Event organizer Malinda Roberts said it was a "momentous occasion" having candidates talk exclusively about disability issues.

Leading up to the April 19 provincial election, Abilities Manitoba has been sharing its "Disability Matters" messaging with the electorate to see a host of issues that matter to the disabled community addressed by the next government.

They want increased accessibility, fair wages, timely access to treatment and what they call a "dignified income," in which people suffering prolonged disabilities might gain more economic independence while on Employment and Income Assistance (EIA).

On Thursday, a representative from the Liberal, PC, NDP and Green party took on each other and some of those challenges — each vying for support from the more than

Crowds gathered to hear representatives from four parties in the Disabilities Matter debate on Thursday — the largest debate crowd to date, and the first time in decades a debate has been held on disability issues. BRAEDEN JONES/METRO

1,000 Manitobans watching. “It was a fantastic event,” Roberts said.

“People are finding their voices and courage to speak up about their issues and they felt valued today.”

There were no empty seats in the 300-seat Norwood Hotel ballroom, along with another 200 in overflow rooms, 200 watching live online and eight crowded satellite locations, including Steinbach, Selkirk, The Pas, Thompson and Brandon. James Beddome, Green party leader, was particularly keen to talk about the dignified income item on the wish-list, given that “the Greens are promoting the idea of guaranteed annual income.”

“Now for those on EIA, they would still be entitled to EIA... the net result is about a 25 per cent increase,” he said.

On the question of reducing wait times for disability services, Vanessa Hamilton of the Liberal Party said after almost 20 years working in healthcare, wait times are something she’s intimately familiar with.

“The Manitoba Liberal party finds it unacceptable that there is a two year waiting list for families with children with autism, and (so) we will be providing $3 million to reduce that wait time,” Hamilton said, adding the party is also focussed on improving mental health and home care access.

Progressive Conservative candidate Ian Wishart said his party recognizes many of the issues have been “ongoing” problems for many years under the NDP government.

He said some of the income-related concerns for people with intellectual and other disabilities who are on “limited fixed incomes” were exacerbated by the PST increase.

Kerri Irvin-Ross, the NDP candidate in attendance, weathered criticism like that from her opponents for most of the event and pushed them aside, saying things people value the most are “in jeopardy” with the other parties, and ended on a note celebrating the debate itself for having happened.

“I hope that all of you have heard that you are valued,” she told people in her closing remarks.

Liberals distance party from Brandon candidate

MANITOBA ELECTION

Hospital wait times comment is ammunition for opposition

A Liberal candidate in the Manitoba provincial election who suggested health-care wait times could be cut by closing hospitals abruptly changed his tune Thursday and said his comments were just a publicity stunt.

Billy Moore, one of several last-minute Liberal candidates for the April 19 election, said repeatedly Wednesday and Thursday that the wide availability of hospital emergency rooms encourages people to use them for minor or non-existent ailments.

"People want to get sick even if they're not sick, because there are hospitals that need to be filled," he said in an interview Thursday, echoing remarks he made the previous day at a candidates debate.

Moore, who is running in the Brandon West constituency, said he received concerned comments from people. But he initially maintained that two of Winnipeg's six hospitals should be closed.

Hours later, he said the entire controversy was a ruse and he really supports keeping all hospitals open.

"I only said it ... for publicity so people will be apt to listen to me when I speak again," Moore said. "I said what I said yesterday for publicity, and we can go from here with reality."

The New Democrats pounced on Moore's initial comments.

"The Liberals' plan to close ... hospitals would hurt families here in Brandon and throughout Manitoba," NDP candidates Drew Caldwell and Linda Ross said in a written statement.

Moore, 76, said he is "a little green" when it comes to politics.

He decided to become a candidate last week and filed his nomination two hours before Tuesday's deadline. The Liberals, who held one seat when the election was called, had been scrambling to try to fill all 57 slots for the election.

Five candidates have been rejected by Elections Manitoba. One candidate missed the nomination deadline. One other was disqualified for having been an enumerator for Elections Manitoba, the non-partisan agency that governs provincial votes. Three others had improper addresses of supporters on their nomination forms.

The Liberals were filing nominations so close to Tuesday's deadline, they had no time to fix the problems with the addresses.

Moore, who lives in Portage la Prairie, said he decided to run in Brandon after being offered a choice by the Liberals.

"I was told of the vacancies they had in different ridings, so it was my choice and I chose Brandon West."

The Liberals have not been a major player in Manitoba politics for more than two decades, but are hoping for a breakthrough.

Experimental films on Friday lineup all April

Open City Cinema is launching a month-long project to bring experimental underground film to Winnipeggers ahead of its annual festival.

Every Friday throughout April, it is hosting screenings at Cinematheque, kicking off April 1 with work donated by Winnipeg filmmakers.

Scott Fitzpatrick is one of the organizers behind OCC, and he transforms text into sound using a laser printer, 16 mm film and analog projector. His project is called Second Star.

Aaron Zeghers, another name behind OCC. His piece, Holland, Man, will have its Winnipeg premiere Friday as well.

Zeghers said it is an expanded cinema performance piece, rather than just a film, because it's presented and performed live using five projectors.

"I also, throughout the piece, do some live soundtrack," said Zeghers.

Though this is nothing like a film that would be shown in most theatres, Zeghers said it is accessible for everyone.

"(It's for) anyone that's willing to take a chance and check out something that's different than probably something they would see on Netflix or on TV or in a cinema," said Zeghers.

He promised engaging content that is bold and will make the audience think.

Friday screenings later in the month will be bringing in films from outside of Canada.

"Recently, OCC got some Canada Council funding to do cultural exchanges with other cities," said Aaron Zeghers of OCC.

He said they showed experimental films in the U.S. and are now bringing films from elsewhere here.

Who would think a veteran comedienne like Mary Walsh would still get jittery about performing in front of an audience?

"Oh, I still get very nervous and am always concerned and worried about my material and whether it will be funny or not."

Walsh, who hails from St. John's, Newfoundland may be best known for her work on This Hour Has 22 Minutes, CBC's wildly popular take on current affairs. The series, which she also created, earned her numerous Gemini awards and showcased her dynamic range of characters, including the flagrantly outspoken 'Marg Delahunty — Princess Warrior.'

hard," said the 63-year-old, who is also an outspoken advocate for mental health and addiction awareness.

This is the first time Walsh will play a role in the festival by hosting the gala event "Truth Bomb"

April 8 at Pantages Theatre.

"I am really excited about coming to Winnipeg and doing this," she said. "Comedy is my life and always has been. I grew up in a very funny family in a province where really, everyone is funny. It was just necessary to have a comedic outlook on things."

As for what it was like to play Marg Delahunty — Princess Warrior, Walsh said she named that character after all of the Margs she knows, in particular a friend of her Aunt May's.

"It started when we did the show CODCO and everyone was referred to as Marg, even the men," she said with a laugh. "So when we did 22 Minutes, this Marg came to life and even though I'm not a regular anymore, I still come on to play that role. I just recently did it with Ontario Premier Kathleen Wynne."

When asked what her most outrageous Marg Delahunty ambushes have been, she cites the one involving former Toronto Mayor Rob Ford and kissing former Prime Minister Stephen Harper.

"Kissing that man was pretty darn difficult."

'We can't let those people die in vain'

TRAGEDY

Six adults, 3 kids killed in First Nation community fire

A First Nations chief says the deaths of nine people in a house fire on a remote northern Ontario reserve should spur the federal government to improve what he says are third-world conditions on dozens of reserves.

"We can't let these people die in vain," Isadore Day with the Chiefs of Ontario said Thursday. "There should be a direct and immediate response to this situation. This is typical across all First Nations that are living in third-world conditions."

A blaze that erupted in a family home late Tuesday night on the Pikangikum reserve killed six adults and three children.

Ontario Provincial Police said investigators and a stress team were in the community, but finding the cause of the blaze could take "a week or more."

A fundraising page created by a community member identified the dead as Gilbert and Annette Strang, their daughter Faith, Faith's husband Dietrich Peters and the younger couple's three children — Ireland, 4, Aubree, 2, and eight-month-old Amber.

The Strangs' son Gilbert and his wife Sylvia Peters also died in the fire, it said.

Previous inquests into similar tragedies have highlighted the challenges facing remote northern reserves such as Pikangikum.

Homes are dilapidated, not built to comply with any modern code and often don't have running water, let alone a smoke detector. There are often several generations of families sharing a tiny bungalow, heightening the potential toll fires can take when they break out.

"Most homes are simply a death trap," Day said.

Lawmakers in Greece were ready to support legislation to deport refugees back to Turkey as clashes between migrants persisted Thursday at overcrowded detention camps.

A three-hour fight broke out overnight between groups of migrants camping out in Greece's main port of Piraeus, leaving eight people injured and requiring treatment at nearby hospitals.

The clashes, believed to have been between Afghan and Syrian migrants, left the area strewn with rocks and broken glass. New protests were also reported at detention camps on the Greek islands of Lesbos and Chios, from where deportations to Turkey are due to start next week.

Nintendo goes mobile

TECHNOLOGY

Revenue from mobile gaming surpassing consoles

After a promising launch in Japan, Nintendo's long-overdue foray into mobile is set for a much wider test.

The Japanese electronics maker's free to download Miitomo mobile app for iOS and Android went live in the U.S. Thursday. Nintendo says Miitomo is also available in numerous other countries including Canada and in several languages.

While Nintendo remains committed to the video console business it has a powerful impetus for branching out given that Candy Crush maker King and others have demonstrated that a single mobile game franchises can generate billion-dollar annual sales.

Industry research firm Newzoo estimates that mobile gaming revenue hit $30 billion (U.S.) last year, surpassing console gaming at $26.4 billion. Newzoo says while growth has cooled in North America and Europe, it remains explosive in Asia.

Nintendo is partnering with Tokyo Internet firm DeNA to develop and operate new game apps based on Nintendo's intellectual property, including its iconic game characters, for use on nearly ubiquitous mobile devices.

"With Miitomo, Nintendo takes its first step into the world of smart devices," said Scott Moffitt, Nintendo of America's executive vice president of sales and marketing.

Nintendo says the app was downloaded a million times in the first three days in Japan after its release on March 17, ranking as the most downloaded free app on both the App Store and Google Play.

The company, however, is playing catch up in the increasingly crowded mobile game space and its in app purchase strategy is unlikely to make up for a lack of paid app revenue in the early stages.

But analysts said the mobile offering could bring back players who migrated away from games on the company's dedicated hardware, such as the Wii and handheld DS devices.

"This should remove any doubts about the Nintendo brand's relevancy in the smartphone age," said Jefferies analyst Atul Goyal.

The family-friendly games maker plans to launch four more mobile games by the end of 2017 that will also be free to download.

Unlike Miitomo, future titles will include some of Nintendo's most popular characters and the company has promised to bring hits like Super Mario Bros. to mobile phones and tablets. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

GAMING

What's next?

Nintendo will always be beloved by gamers for its unique take on gaming. Here's a look at their main products and what might be coming next:

1 DS — The DS line of products have sold more than 200-million units, but sales have declined over the past four years. It was the dominant portable system, and while beloved franchises and characters still sell well, it's facing huge competition from smartphone gaming, where the prices of games are a fraction of the price.

2 Wii U — Nintendo's latest home console has struggled ever since it launched, and just never captured the sales lightning of its predecessor, the Wii. However, most fans are already looking toward what's coming next.

3 Mobile — Miitomo is the first game out of Nintendo's partnership with DeNA, the first Japanese mobile game company that it's partnered with. The plan is to create new games based on the company's characters, but not release versions of older console games. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

DECODED Climate shocker

NOW GLOBAL WARMING MAKES THINGS COLDER

The polar ice cap is the smallest we have ever seen it. Each winter, the vast arena of ice that covers the Arctic Ocean reaches a peak area big enough to cover all of Canada and about half the United States. This year is different. The ice's peak size is the smallest it's been in the 37 years we've measured it. Climate change is here, and we could be in for some wild weather.

WHAT'S GOING ON?

Scientists believe sea ice helps keep the circling mass of cold air we call the polar vortex close to the North Pole.

■ As global average temperatures have climbed, the Arctic Ocean ice has shrunk. Arctic temperatures were 5.5 to 8.3 C above normal this season.

■ With less ice to reflect sunlight, the ocean absorbs it.

■ This triggers changes to pressure and temperature and causes the jet stream to wander and wobble.

■ The result? Frigid polar vortex air travels south, unleashing cold snaps like the one expected in the next few days from Manitoba to the Maritimes. Brr!

■ A meandering jet stream is also a recipe for extreme weather events like Hurricane Sandy.

I can't keep up — now, any alcohol is bad for me?

What, now even one or two drinks a day is unhealthy? I'm so sick of conflicting health advice! — Felicia, Vancouver

Dear Felicia,

Believe me, as a boxed-wine aficionado, I'm upset about this too. An analysis out of the University of Victoria this month looked at 87 past studies about the relationship between drinking alcohol and rates of death from any cause. It cast doubt on years of evidence suggesting people who enjoy one or two drinks per day have lower rates of heart disease, diabetes and death than those who never drink at all. (That's premature death. The lifetime risk of death is 100 per cent). Here's the problem: 73 of these studies didn't sort the participants properly. Abstainers (people who don't drink and never have) were frequently lumped into the "non-drinkers" category along with people who currently abstain, but used to drink.

And why do people quit drinking? Often because of health problems or old age. Light drinkers misleadingly appear healthier in comparison.

After adjusting the data for that, there was little difference in death rates between light drinkers and teetotalers. Light drinkers are at higher risk of cancer death, but a lower risk of heart disease.

This is one paper, not the final word on the topic. But it shows the need to be careful interpreting observational studies of health outcomes at a big-picture, population level; so many variables are at play that it's hard to account for them all.

Here's what we do know: Any benefits of alcohol disappear above one or two drinks a day, and drinkers knocking back four or more risk addiction, serious health problems and early demise. But for most, light drinking is low-risk. I'll raise one or two glasses to that.

Linklater goes for the raunch

Newest film set in 1980, before the cultural backlash

Richard Crouse
For Metro Canada

Richard Linklater's new film Everybody Wants Some!! is set in that sweet spot between Saturday Night Fever and the Reagan Years.

Ripe with feathered hair, bell bottom pants and milk crates used as LP storage, it's the story of college life over the course of one weekend in 1980 set to the throbbing beat of disco and new wave music.

"It was a raunchy time," says Linklater. "It was pretty hedonistic. Sex, drugs and rock and roll. I had to impose that back on my cast."

"Disco was sex. Dancing was foreplay. You were hoping to keep it going and that it would get personal. The humour was really raunchy. It was not innocent but there was a certain kind of playfulness to it."

The 55-year-old director calls the 1980s "a good time for me. A good time to be in your twenties. I was that guy who took his album collection and his music and his speakers off to college. My entire net worth at that age was in music."

"You do a movie to exam-was a good time to be young because that was all going to change."

The Texas-born filmmaker says he spent his '80s college years underground, immersed in punk rock. "It was getting kind of ugly in accepted culture so I zoned out a lot of it."

Since then he has made a career chronicling contemporary suburban culture in films like Slacker, Dazed and Confused and most recently in the twelve-years-in-the-making Boyhood.

Along the way he's learned a thing or two about how society is changing.

"I think the culture has actually changed less and less," he says.

"I observed that on Boyhood. I thought the world would look a lot different in those twelve years. If you take 1969 to 1981 you got a lot of different looks, cars, everything. In Boyhood nothing changed. The phones changed but the cars all looked the same, the hairstyles."

"I think we've hit a wall. Technology is so quick moving that it satisfies that desire in us for change. Punk comes out of (the idea) that I want something new."

"I don't think humans feel that deep need for demonstrable rejection of the old and embracing of the new because they feel there is so much being satisfied technologically. Whatever urge that was to stick a safety pin in your cheek and go create a new dance, you don't see that anymore."

NEW FILM

For con man, lying is just a way of life

The movie Thank You for Calling is based on the exploits of French-Israeli con man Gilbert Chikli, who would pretend to be a CEO or intelligence agent. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The man who nearly stole over 70 million euros from France's business and banking elite is a serial manipulator who sees fraud not as a crime but as a way of life, according to those behind a new film based on the con artist's exploits.

Je Compte sur Vous — released in English under the name Thank You for Calling — is based on the exploits of the French-Israeli Gilbert Chikli, who engineered rogue payments by phoning companies and pretending to be the firm's CEO or a French intelligence agent. Those behind the film, which was released in France on Dec. 30, describe Chikli as a chameleon of a man, a brazen charmer whose boasts suggest he has yet to abandon his criminal career.

"Chikli is an unstoppable seduction machine," said director Pascal Elbe in a recent interview in Paris. "For him it's a job; it's definitely not a con."

Chikli's heists were astounding in their daring. With a little background research and a well-placed phone call, Chikli could cajole or bluster his way into organizing the transfer of several hundred thousand, a million or even millions of euros to bank accounts in Dubai, Russia, China or Hong Kong.

His victims put down the phone convinced they were speaking to their boss or to a genuine French spy. One spoke of being taken in by a man with "an extremely powerful tone of voice and self-assurance." Two more were convinced — somehow — to withdraw cash and hand-deliver it to bars in Paris. When tricks or charm didn't work, Chikli turned to bullying; another employee was threatened with losing her job if she didn't immediately organize the transfer of nearly $2 million to the U.K.

"He adapts to his interlocutor; that's what's crazy," Elbe said. "He improvises. He reacts. He riffs off what you're saying and gives you back what you want to hear."

Richard Crouse
For Metro Canada

In the films Take Shelter and Mud, director Jeff Nichols explored themes of social anxiety caused by fear of the unknown.

When I suggest that his new movie, Midnight Special — a sci-fi road film about a father and a son with special powers — continues that examination, he agrees, but only to a point.

"I certainly think you could make that statement and it would be fair," he says, "but it doesn't exactly line up with what I was thinking."

"I was thinking about what it is to be a parent. I think being a parent is to have faith in the unknown."

"You don't know what your children are going to grow up to be. You don't know what's going to happen to them. You don't know if they are going to make it all the way."

"You have to have faith in who they can be, who they are developing into. Who they are currently. I think that is what parenthood is and I think that is why there is so much fear and anxiety that comes from being a parent."

Nichols says he originally came up with the idea for a "sci-fi government chase film" but adds, "That could be really silly, so I think it is up to me as a filmmaker to apply these kind of personal feelings I have and my relationships to the locations and to the world at large to try to ground this film and give it some kind of actual purpose."

To complete the picture, Nichols cast Michael Shannon as the father.

A frequent collaborator, Shannon has starred in all of Nichols' films, including the upcoming Loving.

"I think he makes me a better writer, especially in a film like Midnight Special where I'm trying to reduce the need for backstory to be delivered through monologues."

"When you have a person like Mike, he fills all the spaces between the lines with all that subtext."

"He carries it on his face, in his countenance. He is the complete story and he doesn't even have to say a word."

Midnight Special is the extraordinary kind of sci-fi movie that teases out the information bit by bit.

We learn enough to stay involved and are treated to several spectacular and exciting scenes along the way, but when it comes time to put a period on the story, Nichols instead uses an ellipsis in a metaphysical ending that will mean different things to different people.

It owes a nod to his old hero Stephen Spielberg but feels distinctly like a Jeff Nichols film.

"If you look at ET and the bicycle flying and all these other moments that are classic moments in Spielberg films, they are wonderful. I don't do that."

"For better and for worse. I don't do that. Maybe it's because I live in the modern age and am a bit more of a pessimist."

"I don't consider myself a cynic. I like films that ultimately are hopeful, but there is a different kind of conclusion in my films than his films."

"I think my films point toward hope but don't fully embrace it. I think that is the difference."

"It could also be the difference between a blockbuster and whatever this is going to be, but that is who I am as a person."

McDermott 'fearless' for new show

PREMIERE

Actor says he is in a 'great place' as series set to debut

The last time viewers saw Dean McDermott on the small screen he was at one of the lowest points of his life.

On one hand he had been juggling hosting duties on Chopped Canada for two seasons. On the other he was baring his soul on reality series True Tori, attempting to reconcile his marriage to Tori Spelling following a public affair, and dealing with depression and suicidal thoughts.

As he debuts this Friday in Super Channel's horror series Slasher, he's very much a re-assembled man.

"I'm in a really great place now with my sobriety and my headspace and my depression, and I just feel great and I feel ready," he says. "I just felt more open as an actor and as a person to sort of try new things and be fearless. I guess it's because I'd been through so much."

"I'd been dragged through the mud, I'd hit bottom. I was

THE OTHER CHARACTERS

Sarah Bennett (Katie McGrath)

She was cut out of her mother's womb as a baby, but that isn't stopping her from returning to her hometown and moving back into the house where her parents were brutally murdered decades ago.

Dylan Bennett (Brandon Jay McLaren)

As the paper's new editor in chief, Dylan has access to all sorts of information. Information that will hopefully help his wife Sarah finally make peace with her horrifying past.

Cam Henry (Steve Byers)

As one of Sarah's childhood friends and potential adult crush, this officer is there as a moral support for his old bestie, but possibly something more as well.

The Being Erica and Rookie Blue star shows an entirely new side of herself in this deranged role, as a mentally unstable woman who may not be as unhinged as she first appears.

Brenda Merritt (Wendy Crewson)

As Sarah's grandmother, Brenda has been largely responsible for making sure her granddaughter grew up as happily as possible.

But as the truth begins to emerge, there may be some questions even she refuses to answer.

in a horrible place personally and so now being on set it was, I've been to hell and back, so nothing really throws me off my game now."

On Slasher, McDermott plays police chief Iain Vaughn, a seasoned vet who is none too pleased when the child of a couple brutally murdered in their home on Halloween returns to town decades later with her husband in tow. Naturally, it doesn't take long for gruesome killings to resume, despite the original killer now being locked safely away.

"I'm an actor first and foremost, that's what I was for 20 years before I came to L.A. Then the reality thing just kind of fell in my lap and it was fun to run with for a while until it wasn't," McDermott explains. "I was so happy and blessed and grateful for the role on Slasher because it was time for me to get back to my first love of acting in scripted television."

As McDermott gears up for the Canadian premiere of the eight-episode series, he wants Canadians to know that leaving Chopped Canada when it was renewed for a third season wasn't by choice. Although he's firm that Shaw Media supported him and stuck by him after the first season when news of his affair broke and True Tori aired, they still parted ways on a sour note.

"(Shaw) was just like, 'It's a network choice,' to later find out that it was financial. They launched the show on my back and then got a cheaper host (former Bachelor Canada Brad Smith)," McDermott says.

"It really p—d me off because I love that show... it left a bad taste in my mouth when they approached me and told me that. If it was financial, talk to me about it. I would have taken a pay cut." TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Kansas City, Kansas City here I come

MUSIC

Good music awaits in this city known for jazz and blues

Kansas City has a wide-open selection of bars to help the business traveller shake off that last meeting and down beverages poured from full-size bottles not found in the mini-bar.

There are also loads of taverns that aim to sully your gin and quiet with music — DJs, karaoke, a guy on a guitar.

And then there is the Blue Room, where patrons head when the need for good music pushes aside those lower-brain urges. You don't go to the Blue Room just to have a drink, chit chat or get rid of another night.

You go to the Blue Room to listen, and not in a background-fill-in-the-gaps kind of way, but in a "Hey — pay attention!" kind of way.

The Blue Room is a small two-tiered space adjoining Kansas City's American Jazz Museum in the Historic 18th & Vine Jazz District, a few miles from the hotels and convention locales of Crown Center, downtown and the Country Club Plaza. It's dark, the bar is stocked, the tables small.

On a recent Friday night, by 8:40 p.m., apart from a couple bar stools, the place was standing-room-only packed. The draw that night was the James Ward but they were a minority.

The Blue Room "is a working jazz club exhibit" that hosts veteran musicians and new bands, locals and the internationally

It's open Thursday, Friday and Saturday evenings, with the last Monday of the month usually for big bands, and the last Thursday for Latin Jazz and Salsa. "We've got some pretty good Latin bands here in Kansas City, and they pack the place," Burnett said. "And, we have about a dozen big bands in Kansas City that are off the chain."

The Blue Room also holds a free jam session on Monday evenings where musicians of all skill levels can sit in with veterans. For the next trip to Kansas City, pack your sax.

"It is something we want to do": Draymond Green whose 68-7 Warriors will push for a record 73 wins instead of resting for the NBA playoffs

Playoff purgatory sums up holy mess nationwide

NHL

First blackout of post-season since 1970 new low for Canada

It's rare — and almost unthinkable for hockey fans — but the Stanley Cup playoffs will go ahead without any Canadian teams.

The Ottawa Senators were the last club to be eliminated on Wednesday night, despite beating the Winnipeg Jets 2-1. The Philadelphia Flyers' 2-1 shootout win over the Washington Capitals mathematically eliminated the Sens.

The Jets, Montreal Canadiens, Toronto Maple Leafs, Calgary Flames, Edmonton Oilers and Vancouver Canucks had already fallen short and will stand aside as 16 U.S.-based clubs battle for the Cup.

"It's such a big part of our culture in Canada and ever since I can remember growing up, gearing up for that first round of playoffs is huge," said Calgary Flames captain Mark Giordano, a Toronto native. "It's disappointing that we're not going to have a team from Canada represented."

"But there are still a lot of great players, a lot of great teams, a lot of great Canadian players on American teams, so I'm sure the fans will still enjoy it and it will be another great playoff."

It is only the second time it has happened in NHL history. But it has been coming, with the Leafs, Oilers, Flames and Jets all missing the post-season more often than not in recent years.

In 2014, Montreal was the only Canadian club in the playoffs. In 2011 and 2012, there were only two.

It will cost the teams millions in lost ticket and merchandise sales. Bars, restaurants and retailers of team jerseys and flags will miss out on the extra sales from playoff fever.

"All the teams come into the year certainly hoping for more than we have," said Canucks coach Willie Desjardins. "As a country we just take so much pride in our hockey. It's hard to believe I guess in some ways that one of the teams wouldn't get in."

It also is a nervy time for Rogers Sportsnet, which in 2013 inked a 12-year, $5.2-billion deal for rights to NHL games and now hasn't a single Canadian team to highlight in what is usually the biggest ratings period of the year.

Already, fans are being reminded that great playoff matchups await anyway, and that Canadian stars like Chicago captain Jonathan Toews.

LAST TIME OUT

The last time no Canadian team made the playoffs was in 1970, when the Maple Leafs finished sixth and last in their division and the Canadiens ended up fifth, losing the final playoff spot to the New York Rangers on a tie-breaker.

Los Angeles rearguard Drew Doughty and Pittsburgh centre Sidney Crosby are still in the hunt.

"This league is very competitive and there is no rhyme or reason why there is not a Canadian team in the playoffs," said Edmonton forward Matt Hendricks, an American. "It's unfortunate because of the blood, sweat and tears that the fans in this country put into the game. It's just an off-year."

"I think it's a fluke," said Montreal defenceman Nathan Beaulieu. "Every team has Canadian players, so I don't think it has anything to do with Canadian teams."

Five Canadian squads reached the playoffs last season, with Winnipeg grabbing the last wild card spot in the Western Conference to reach the post-season for the first time in four years.

RECIPE Chicken Chili Tacos

Ceri Marsh & Laura Keogh
For Metro Canada

This recipe will be your newest obsession for so many reasons (easy, fast, inexpensive) but the main reason we make it all time is because it's just so darn delicious.

Ready in
Prep time: 10 minutes
Cook time: 8 hours

Ingredients

- 6 boneless, skinless chicken thighs
- 1 1/2 cups prepared pico de gallo or salsa
- 1/4 cup fresh lime juice (about 1 1/2 limes)
- 2 teaspoons cumin seeds, lightly toasted
- 2 cloves garlic, minced
- 1/4 cup chopped fresh cilantro
- 12 taco shells (crisp or soft/flour or corn)

Directions

1. Place chicken, pico de gallo and garlic in a slow cooker and stir to combine. Cover and cook on low for 6 hours. (You can also cook on high for 3 hours.)

2. Allow to cool a bit. Scoop the chicken out with a big slotted spoon and place it in a large serving bowl. Use two forks to pull the meat apart. The chicken will shred easily. Stir in some cooking juice from the pot and top with the cilantro.

3. Place the shredded chicken, your taco shells and desired fixings on the table and let everyone put together their perfect taco.

*IT'S ALL IN THE STARS Your daily horoscope by Francis Drake

Aries March 21 - April 20
This is a good day to count your blessings, and one of the biggest blessings for Aries this year is that you can improve your job. You also can improve your health.

Taurus April 21 - May 21
This year, more than a decade in the past and a decadent future, you have the best chance to enjoy vacations — a major vacation or a series of little getaways.

Gemini May 22 - June 21
This is an excellent year to benefit from real-estate deals. You will improve your home life and all your family relationships.

Cancer June 22 - July 23
A positive state of mind is the secret of happiness. And this is what you have in spades this year. It's easy to be optimistic!

Leo July 24 - Aug. 23
You can earn more money this year, which is good news for your sign — you like to spend big. You'll be laughing all the way to the bank.

Virgo Aug. 24 - Sept. 23
With lucky Jupiter in your sign now, life couldn't be better. Of course, nothing is perfect, because it never is. But you have the advantage now over all the other signs.

Libra Sept. 24 - Oct. 23
Your spiritual life will be more important now for a number of reasons. Welcome this opportunity to be introspective and come to terms with what really matters in life.

Scorpio Oct. 24 - Nov. 22
This is such a popular year for you! Enjoy meeting new friends. And enjoy joining clubs, groups and organizations. Remember: Your relations with others will benefit you this year.

Sagittarius Nov. 23 - Dec. 21
This is the perfect year to put your name up in lights. It's easy to impress others, because they see you in such positive terms. (Milk this for all it's worth)

Capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 20
Grab every opportunity to travel, because you want to expand your horizons this year. This is also a good year for publishing, the media and higher education.

Aquarius Jan. 21 - Feb. 19
Gifts, goodies and the wealth of others will benefit you this year. Keep your pockets open and enjoy this advantage.

Pisces Feb. 20 - March 20
This is a wonderful year for relationships for you. In fact, this is the best year in over a decade for Pisces people to get married. Oh my.
